

Homophones are...

phones that can only be used in one country.

words that sound the same but mean something different.

words that are related to mobile phones.

Dingwall English teachers no/know that their pupils understand homophones. Its/it's just that, at times they struggle to get it right/write. Sometimes there/they're/their are to/too/two many homophones four/for them to/too/two remember. If only they new/knew that they could check/cheque them in the dictionary too/two/to make sure there/they're/their correct. English teachers get bored/board of correcting these mistakes and it takes sew/so much time/thyme.

Remember your homophones.

A homophone is a group of words that sound the same but are spelt differently and mean something very different.

In every lesson, remember to check your homophones

If you think you've got it right, get your teacher to check and sign the correct box below.

Their	Too	Our	It's	Our	Your	Where	Their	Of	Too	Of
There	To	Are	Its	Hour	You're	Wear	There	Off	To	Off
They're	Two			Are			They're		Two

Now it's your turn!

- Heading back to classrooms you are going to take on one final activity.
- The passage below needs some homophones. Can you figure out which ones?
- The marathon runners moved through/threw the gate/gait and out onto the road/rode. As the early morning missed/mist came down like a vale/veil over the town, they were last seen going passed/past the local counsel/council chambers before they disappeared from view.
